Research for Equity in Higher Education

Dedicated to the creation and dissemination of rigorous and timely research, the Pell Institute for the Study of Opportunity in Higher Education works to encourage policymakers, educators, and the public to address systemic equity issues in postsecondary education.

Elizabeth Harden is a TRIO SSS Coordinator at Craven Community College. She is experienced in public policy analysis in educational access and attainment among low-income, first-generation, disabled, and historically marginalized populations. She is an alumna of the TRIO SSS program at Old Dominion University, where she earned her Bachelor of Science in Human Services with a double minor in Sociology and Women's Studies. There, she also earned her certificate in Diversity Studies, which inspired her to pursue an advanced degree that would support her exploration of social equity in public policy. Elizabeth completed her Master of Public Administration with a concentration in Public Management at the L. Douglas Wilder School of Government and Public Affairs at Virginia Commonwealth University.
