Research for Equity in Higher Education

Dedicated to the creation and dissemination of rigorous and timely research, the Pell Institute for the Study of Opportunity in Higher Education works to encourage policymakers, educators, and the public to address systemic equity issues in postsecondary education.

Marian Jackson-Scott is a native of Plaisance, Louisiana. Marian attended the University of Louisiana at Lafayette and attained a Bachelor's degree in English, a Master's degree in Secondary Education at Southern University, and an Educational Specialist degree in Educational Leadership from Northwestern State University. Marian attained her Ph.D. in Educational Administration from the University of New Orleans in December 2023. Marian worked as a teacher in the St. Landry Parish School District and was named the High School District Teacher of the Year in 2005-2006. Her research interests include first-generation students, equity, and secondary education. Most of her focus has been on improving equitable learning outcomes. In addition, she has made contributions in helping first-generation teacher education majors complete baccalaureate degrees. Marian has presented research findings at the American Educational Research Association and numerous state and regional conferences. She is a proud alumna of the Ronald E. McNair Program at the University of Louisiana at Lafayette. Presently, she is employed by the University of Louisiana at Lafayette as a project director.
